My Growth Plan Journal

OSHKOSH™

My Growth Plan Discovery Journal is intended to aid you in your personal development.

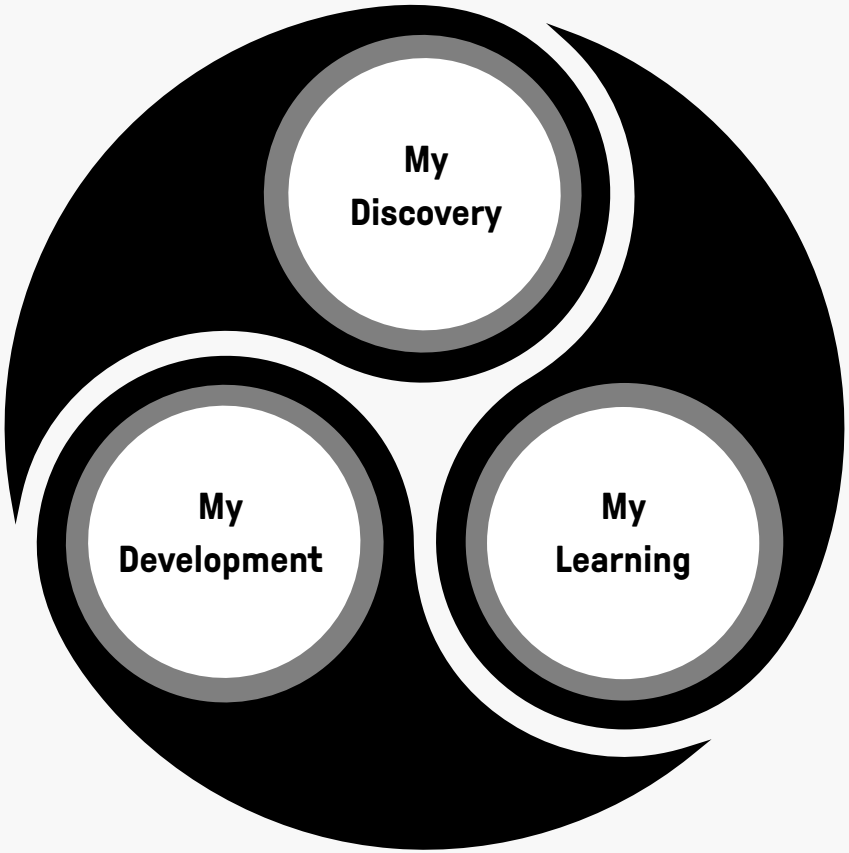

Use this journal as a guide to:

- Capture your self-reflection activities
- Record and refer to feedback received during discussions with your leaders
- Track your progress

Once you've accomplished development items, add them to your profile in Workday!

- You do not need to transfer everything from your journal into Workday – only the targeted focus areas and actions you feel comfortable sharing.
- You have creative freedom to keep your journaling broad. This is not a final document, but a live, evolving plan.
- Feel free to use, add, and modify ideas for charting your development plan.

My Growth Plan comprises three components.

Capture your self-reflection in My Discovery to understand your development needs. Here are some thought starters to help you gather insights and ideas. It is very important to be transparent with yourself about any current gaps.

- How do my behaviors distinguish me from others?
- What future changes are facing the organization and how can I impact them?
- What information have I been given about myself through feedback, assessments, and discussions?
- What is my vision of how I'd like to grow?
- How might I gain specific skills and experience through special projects or assignments?

Enter your self-reflections in this box.

My Learning will help you capture your development needs and your potential growth paths. Here are some thought starters to help you identify learning opportunities.

Make sure to consider the 70/20/10 learning principle. Don't forget to seek partnership with your leader!

- What don't I know that I could benefit from learning?
- What projects or initiatives are coming up that I could benefit from being a part of?
- What feedback do I need in order to grow?
- Who is someone in the organization I would like to get exposure to in order to learn? What would I like to learn from this person?
- What relationships should I develop or foster?

Enter your learning opportunities in this box.

The 70/20/10 learning principle

At Oshkosh, we believe in the 70/20/10 principle of learning. According to this principle a development plan should have a 70% focus on experience on the job (Challenging Assignments and Hardship), a 20% focus on exposure (Other People), and a 10% focus on education (Coursework and Personal Life).

The principle is known as 70/20/10, but the actual numbers are a little different as you can see in the image above.

My Development comes together once you have defined My Discovery and My Learning. Narrow your list of ideas and options from My Discovery and My Learning into an actionable place to start. Here's an example to help you determine what you might commit to.

GOAL – What do you want to focus on?	Delegating more
REALITY – What is happening now?	I'm just doing the work rather than taking the time to evaluate if it is an opportunity to delegate.
OPTIONS – What can you do to make it work?	- Review my workload to determine opportunities to delegate. - Identify work that matches others' development opportunities. - Ask others for interest in the work. - Stop assuming others are too busy. - Assume the work can be done to the same or better quality if someone other than me does it.
WILL – What will you commit to?	(Pick any of the ideas identified in 'options' to implement and track progress – if improvement is lacking, try another option instead.)

Identify 1-2 development goals that you are most excited about or feel will have the greatest impact. Enter them in the table below.

Development Goal 1

Continue to proactively adjust your plan as needed and own moving your development plan forward.

Career advice, coaching, and support can come from your leader, network, mentor, or others in the Oshkosh community. The organization has committed to enabling an environment that allows you to grow.

So, get going in making your development a reality!
